COURSE OBJECTIVE: To provide an increased understanding of the newly awakened American intellect of the nineteenth century as reflected in the essays, poems, stories and novels of seven major authors representative of the period. The literary period for our review will be early Romanticism through Transcendentalism.

MAJOR AUTHORS: Irving, Melville, Hawthorne, Poe, Emerson, Thoreau and Whitman

GRADING: A series of five brief papers (four to eight typewritten pages) will be required in addition to an objective final examination. Papers will count as the basis for two-thirds of the students' grade, and the objective final exam will count as one third. Graduate students will prepare a 100-item annotated bibliography on one of six major authors of this period as well as a five-page written and oral report (in the classroom) on one of the books listed below as secondary readings.

ATTENDANCE: Students are expected to attend each and every class and should not have any more than two absences. Excessive absences could lead to a student being dropped from the course with an automatic grade of "F."
